

MLA Citation Format Simplified (2016)

MLA (2016), recognizing the changing nature of sources, provides scholars with a template to apply to sources. The basic template of elements is provided in the first table. This handout applies the approach to a variety of sources you may encounter. If you encounter a source that is not listed, you can apply the same strategies to format your source, following the basic format as demonstrated in these examples. Periods are usually used in three or four places, places: after the author name, the title of source, and to note the end of the bibliographical entry or the end of the core elements, and then at the end of the bibliographical entry. You will use commas to separate the other elements. New to MLA (2016) is the requirement that you use URL or DOI (digital object identifiers) or other type of document identifier number with the research (see exceptions in note*). If the DOI is available, MLA recommends you use that. For sources without the DOI, provide the URL if applicable. However, you do not use the `http://` at beginning. Provide the core URL. Note: For purposes of this handout, the examples are single-spaced. MLA requires a hanging indent and double-spacing for its citations.

Core Elements:	Apply these core elements, in order noted, to your source:
1. Author. (Period follows this element)	Last name, First name. If no author, the source may have an editor(s), which you would use in Author location, etc. It is possible that the author is an organization. Example: King, Stephen.
2. Title of Source. (Period)	Use italics for a self-contained/independent source. Enclose title in quotation marks if the source is from a collection. Example of a novel: IT . Example of a short story in a collection: "The Bone Church." The Bazaar of Bad Dreams ,
3. Title of Container, (Comma) Note: depending on source, repeat elements 3-9 to account for additional information, such as a database.	Italicize the title of container. The container is usually the source of publication, such as journals, magazines, newspapers, encyclopedias, websites, and more. Example: Brown, Paul. "New Architecture Today." Art Digest ,
4. Other contributors, (Comma)	Sources may have other contributors, which you identify by role: adapted by, directed by, edited by, illustrated by, translated by, etc. Example: Moser, Teri. "Barbara Kingsolver." Popular Contemporary Authors , edited by Michael D. Sharp,
5. Version, (Comma)	If there is more than one version and your source notes that information, include it in your citation. Example: Shakespeare, William, The Tragedy of Othello , edited by Barbara Mowat and Paul Werstine, version 1.3.1,
6. Number, (Comma)	Some sources are part of a numbered sequence. If so, you should include it in your citation. Some sources may have both volumes and number. For instance, many journals include a volume and issue number. If so, you should include both, using the abbreviations: vol., no. Example: Brown, Paul. "New Architecture Today." Art Digest , vol. 25, no. 3,
7. Publisher, (Comma)	If your source lists a publisher, include it in your citation. Example: King, Stephen. "The Bone Church." The Bazaar of Bad Dreams , Scribner, 2015, pp. 155-62.
8. Publication date, (Comma)	Include publication date or most meaningful and relevant date as provided by the source. Example: Brown, Paul. "New Architecture Today." Art Digest , vol. 25, no. 3, 2002,
9. Location. (Period)	Ask yourself, where did I find this source? How can I find this source again? A location can vary, depending on the source you used. A location can be page numbers, URLs, or DOIs or another type of article location identifier. Example: Brown, Paul. "New Architecture Today." Art Digest , vol. 25, no. 3, 2002, pp. 303-13. Example: Kingsolver, Barbara. Barbara Kingsolver: The Authorized Site . 2012, www.kingsolver.com .

*Notes: While MLA recommends you use the url or doi or other document identifier # for online sources, it also notes that if your instructor prefers that you not include them in your bibliographical entry that you should follow your instructor's instructions. Your instructor may also require that you include optional elements, such as date of access, for your online sources. Other optional elements include cities of publication, dates of original or prior publications, series name and the number of the book in the series, total numbers of volumes, types of works, such as unusual sources, such as transcripts or lectures or other addresses. Your instructor may require you to include these. Location of these elements in the entry depend on the element. Some may be placed at end of event (such as date of access: Accessed 05 Aug. 2016.), or some may immediately follow the related core element (such as city of publication, if publisher has more than one location and it is necessary to identify the specific location: London: Bloomsbury,). Another example involves an unexpected work, such as a transcript: you could place the word Transcript at the end of the entry (such as an entry of a conference presentation, if you are accessing just the transcript of presentation). For more information and examples, see the MLA handbook, 8th edition or <https://style.mla.org/>.
